Dancing to Skip's music

"What we do for ourselves dies with us. What we do for others and the world remains and is immortal." ~Albert Pike

"I do not play guitar for applause. I sing the difference that there is between what is true and what is false. Otherwise, I do not sing." ~Violeta Para

Dear Friends,

I believe in the power of music and the strength of the human spirit. I am a Wisconsin-based folk singer, storyteller, and educator. For over forty years, I have traveled around Wisconsin, the Upper-Midwest, and beyond...sharing music, stories, and life.

Along the way, I've marched with people in support of water, affordable housing, and justice for all. I have met, sung, and worked with amazing people striving to create a better world... People who have dedicated their lives to caring for children and the elderly; fighting to protect our rivers, lakes, and public lands... They are reflections of my personal belief in family, community and our shared humanity.

Let's gather soon and raise our voices, hearts, and hands together... sharing common ground, cherishing our differences, and joining in a commitment for a stronger peace-filled world.

Looking forward to sharing music and news with you and your community.

In song and celebration of life,

Skip Jones

For the best in Folk music from Wisconsin and around the world, tune into Dan Robinson's "Simply Folk" on Wisconsin Public Radio statewide Sundays 5-8 PM on air or online at www.SimplyFolk.org

Skip Jones, a career US Navy Veteran has a special connection with veterans and their unique issues. He combines his diverse song repertoire with engaging stories from a lifetime of performing, teaching, and world travel.

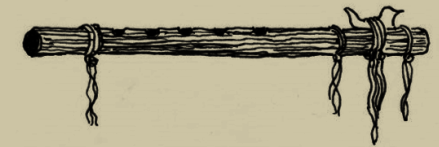

His sources of inspiration and material range from the late folk legend, U. Utah Phillips (his primary mentor), advocates for social justice, and environmental activists. With 23 grandchildren and 7 great-grands, he is a natural with audiences of all ages.

Accompanied by guitar, banjo, and Native American flute, he has entertained and educated at thousands of libraries, schools, festivals, nursing homes, and community events across the country. He is experienced in performing for people with special needs, and his warmth and affection for all audiences is evident in his voice and interaction with listeners.
